The Secretariat of the United Nations presents its compliments to the Permanent Missions to the United Nations and has the honour to inform them about an upcoming training course at the Signals Academy in Entebbe, Uganda, which is specifically dedicated for women military/police in the field of communications and information technologies. The United Nations hereby offers an invitation to women military and police commissioned and non-commissioned officers in an effort to prepare them to participate and support United Nations peacekeeping operations in the field of technology. The first course is tentatively scheduled for 25 July to 5 August 2016, with two additional courses planned to take place over the next twelve months.

The United Nations Signals Academy and Training Centre provides comprehensive training to participating signals personnel at both the management/officer and technician levels. The provision of hands-on training in conjunction with the required theoretical background is designed to improve the performance and efficiency of signals units deployed in peacekeeping missions with the goal of positively impacting performance and signals support of the military and police units operating in the same mission.

This course aims to encourage troop and police-contributing countries to nominate women peacekeepers in the field of military signals and information technology. This first training course, conducted in the English language, will focus on improving technical and planning skills, as well as contributing to a better understanding of the challenges and principles of United Nations field technology support.

All costs associated with participating in these training sessions (airfare, meals and accommodations) will be sponsored by the United Nations, enabled by the generous donation of the Government of Japan.

The United Nations kindly encourages the Permanent Missions to nominate qualified women participants with a respective technology background, fluency in English and approximately two years technical experience. Please include the CVs or resumes of the candidates, which will be reviewed to ensure the candidate has an appropriate background. Complete and return the attached form in the response, to be sent to the focal point, Mr. Athanasios Dimitriou (e-mail: signalsacademy@un.org) by 27 May 2016.

Kindly note that if the number of nominated participants exceeds the capacities of this first course, there will be opportunities to participate in one of the follow-up
